

when in doubt, imitate Jesus

God wants to be personally _____ in the plan and purpose of my life.

We could _____ so much bad and _____ so much good if we simply acknowledge and invite God into our plans.

God's looking at us and saying, "I created you, I know my _____ for your life."

Following Jesus means we observe, learn from, and _____ what He was like.

People have asked, "How can I become a disciple of Jesus?" Some have answered that question by looking for a curriculum to "do the job." Disciple-making is not curriculum driven or a certification program, disciple-making is relationship based. People must be close enough that they will be able imitate behaviors and attitudes. Disciples need access to "daily living" to be able to pattern their life. The weekly meetings at St. Arbucks or a Bible study group are not enough.

We must be close enough to one another to observe how we interact with our families, to see how stressful situations are handled, and to witness how ministry and downtime are facilitated. It is in these settings disciples will learn how to apply Biblical truth to everyday life. With that context in mind, ask yourself the following questions:

- Who's in my life that is discipling me? What am I learning about God, my life, and others as I am around this person?

- Who's in my life that I am discipling? What are they learning about God, their life, and others as they are around me?

- What have I learned about love from the life of Jesus that I could apply to my life this week?

- What have I learned about love from literary mentors (biblical/contemporary) that I could apply to my life this week?

- Where could I accelerate the discipleship process in my life?
 - Who could help me?
 - Who could I help?
